

Teaching and Learning Council
Report: March 12, 2018

The committee has completed its work on the Chancellor's Excellence in Teaching Awards. Over fifty faculty were nominated, ten were chosen as finalists, and four were chosen as winners. All nominees submitted a portfolio containing a CV, a statement of teaching philosophy, and a representative syllabus. Each finalist participated in three classroom observations, provided a syllabus and sample assignment for the observed class, and provided the names of students who the observers could contact. It was challenging to winnow the pool down to the four winners as each finalist is an outstanding teacher. The names of our chosen faculty winners and a biography were forwarded to the Chancellor's Office on March 5. The winners will be publically announced at the Chancellor's banquet later this spring.

The process for the selection of the recipients of the Chancellor's Excellence in Advising awards is completed. We received 49 nominations, and the committee (composed of prior winners) interviewed the ten finalists. They have recommended the winners and sent the appropriate biographical materials to the Chancellor's office.
